OFFICIALS AND ADVOCATES DISCUSS PREVENTION OF FETAL ALCOHOL SPECTRUM DISORDER

By Jeff Cox, Pennsylvania Legislative Services | September 9, 2019

Drug and Alcohol Programs Acting Secretary Jennifer Smith, along with legislators and advocates, gathered today in the Main Capitol Rotunda to raise awareness and discuss the prevention of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (FASD).

Sec. Smith stated, "Today, I stand before you to bring awareness to a 100 percent preventable disorder, FASD, and I am thrilled today to be joined by members of the General Assembly, medical professionals and remarkable individuals who focus every day on overcoming obstacles associated with FASD." She described FASD as "an umbrella term describing the range of effects that occur in an individual whose mother drank alcohol during pregnancy."

Sec. Smith commented, "Unfortunately, even though this disorder is preventable, it is all too prevalent in the United States today." According to Sec. Smith, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that one out of 100 children are born with FASD annually. She described the impact of children born with FASD as "staggering" and provided the following statistics:

- About 80 percent enter the foster care system or adoptive care system;
- Approximately 50 percent will have a disrupted school experience of suspension, expulsion or drop-out;
- More than 60 percent will encounter problems with law enforcement; and
- More than a third will develop substance use disorders.

Sec. Smith told participants, "Our message today is clear: don't drink alcohol when you are pregnant. It is the one sure way to make certain our children and future Pennsylvanians can lead healthy lives."

Rep. Thomas Murt (R-Montgomery), chairman of the House Aging and Older Adult Services Committee and prime sponsor of House Resolution 448, which recognizes September as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Month in Pennsylvania, said, "By standing together we speak with a louder voice, and that can lead to enormous change." He continued, "Today we are reminding our legislature and our fellow Pennsylvanians about a danger many mothers unfortunately overlook." Rep. Murt also stated, "The truth is fetal alcohol syndrome effects more infants than spina bifida, Down syndrome, and muscular dystrophy combined." He asserted, "By declaring September 2019 as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Month in Pennsylvania, we are taking an important step forward in educating women who consume alcohol and who can become pregnant." Concluding his remarks, Rep. Murt said, "Today we are sending an important message that there is no safe amount of alcohol that can be consumed during pregnancy and that abstaining from alcohol during pregnancy is the surest way to prevent this syndrome."

Dr. Renee Turchi, medical director of special programs at St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in Philadelphia, observed that statistics make FASD "one of the most common neuro-developmental disorders for children." She emphasized, "There is no safe time, no safe amount, and no safe type of alcohol to drink while pregnant." Dr. Turchi commented,

“What I would like to see as a first generation Italian and Philadelphian is that we take a Rocky Balboa approach to eliminating FASD and that we do things like screen women and educate our youth at a very young age that alcohol is never safe while you can possibly become pregnant or try to become pregnant, and then we can help all of our children in Pennsylvania.”

Jean Searle, an individual living with FASD, described her conditions and life experiences while living with the disorder. Searle said her brain has not developed the same as an individual without FASD, and that she is still trying to learn her brain’s system of functioning. She said, “Please remember: if you are pregnant, stop drinking now and please get treated.”

Rep. Karen Boback (R-Luzerne), chairman of the House Children and Youth Committee, also emphasized the importance of educating young people on the dangers of consuming alcohol while pregnant or trying to get pregnant.

LEGISLATORS JOIN EMERGENCY SERVICE AGENCIES AT ANNUAL EMS MEMORIAL

By Harrison Cann, Pennsylvania Legislative Services | September 9, 2019

Members of emergency services agencies were joined by Rep. Bryan Cutler (R-Lancaster), Sen. Mike Regan (R-Cumberland), and Rep. Keith Gillespie (R-York) at the ninth annual EMS Memorial Service this afternoon in the Main Capitol Rotunda.

Honoring past emergency medical service (EMS) providers who lost their lives in the line of duty, the memorial service capped off the fourth annual Pennsylvania EMS Memorial Bike Ride, which began Saturday, September 7 at the St. Luke’s Emergency and Transport Services in Tannersville.

John Bell, retired University of Pittsburgh Medical Center pastor, began the service with a prayer. Doug Garretson, chair, Pennsylvania EMS Provider Foundation, acknowledged the participants of the bike ride and thanked the support staff. “We ride in honor of our brothers and sisters who gave their lives in the line of duty,” Garretson said.

Rep. Cutler thanked EMS workers for protecting their communities and families of those who sacrificed their lives in the line of duty.

“As you all know, you do not serve alone. Your entire family serves with you,” Rep. Cutler said. “They sacrifice the long hours, the weekends, the swing shifts and whatever you are doing not knowing what is on the other side of your next call.”

Sen. Regan began detailing his story as a deputy U.S. marshal following the attacks in New York on September 11, 2001. He recognized the “dedication to duty” of EMS members during that time and admired their continued work after witnessing tragedy.

Sen. Regan added that he will look to address recommendations of the Fire and EMS Commission when the General Assembly returns this month. “I think it is important that we remember that 59 people lost their lives trying to save other people’s lives,” he commented.

Rep. Gillespie described his story as a paramedic from 1981 when two first responders, one of which was his partner and friend, died while rescuing a child from an abandoned septic tank. He said that performing cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) on his partner was one of the hardest things he had to do, but that he still has the memories of him and his family. He thanked the attendees for keeping the memories alive of all 59 people that sacrificed their lives for others.

Dylan Ferguson, director, Bureau of EMS, Department of Health, said that EMS providers in the commonwealth are “some of the most selfless and dedicated individuals that you could ever meet.” He reiterated that EMS families also bear the sacrifice of those protecting the community.

Ferguson added that EMS providers have the skill “to turn people’s fear into hope, and the potential to alter the outcomes of the worst day of their lives.” He highlighted the closeness of the EMS community and offered prayers to those that protect their communities and their families.

Garretson stated that the memorial’s purpose is to “honor those emergency medical services personnel who died in the line of duty and to recognize the ultimate sacrifice they have made for their fellow man.” He noted that the names of the EMS providers who lost their lives were all providers from the commonwealth.

The names of the fallen providers were then read and a bell was rung to honor each individual.

Garretson concluded by saying that a lot of the individuals named were not just EMS colleagues, but also employees, partners, friends, and family.

PENNSYLVANIA WORKERS AND UNION CALL FOR ACTION ON HB 1082

By Harrison Cann, Pennsylvania Legislative Services | September 11, 2019

Pennsylvania workers and union representatives, joined by Auditor General Eugene DePasquale and Rep. Thomas Mehaffie (R-Dauphin), asked the General Assembly to take action on HB 1082 and increase health and safety protections for public-sector workers.

“Public employees rush into buildings that are collapsing when everyone else is running out...and too many times they rush in to give their life,” David Gash, president, Harrisburg Region Central Labor Council, stated, following a moment of silence honoring the victims of the September 11 attacks. Gash asserted that he is speaking today because public employees do not share the same protections as private employees.

Gash detailed the story of when he was hit by a car while working for the Department of Transportation (PennDOT), stating that safe working conditions are a right and not a privilege. “We will never be ashamed of fighting for the rights of workers,” Gash added.

DePasquale stated that the issue of workers’ rights should not be a partisan issue. “It has always been stunning to find out that local governments were exempt from a lot of workplace safety regulations,” DePasquale said. “Over time, the ramifications of that distinction become more and more dangerous.” Discussing his previous audits of health care facilities, DePasquale claimed that unsafe working conditions, such as mandatory overtime, are dangerous for both the worker and patient’s safety.

Steve Catanese, president, Service Employees International Union (SEIU) Local 668, stated that following the 9/11 attacks, many people stressed the importance of defining what is “morally right and wrong.” He added that the issue of public worker safety “is morally clear.” Catanese reiterated DePasquale’s claim in that the issue should not be partisan. He stated that many public service workers are going into their field not for the money but for the calling to help society.

“Pennsylvania has not had the courage and fortitude to go to the General Assembly and say ‘we think public workers are worth it.’” Concluding, he reiterated that public workers deserve the same Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations that private-sector workers have, and that he wants to ensure that “children of our members do not have to worry about whether their mom or dad is going to come home.”

George Hartwick, Dauphin County Commissioner, detailed a story of when he was mayor of Steelton and a construction worker lost his life due to a lack of local safety regulations for workers. “The most difficult jobs I found are the ones that SEIU workers are doing,” Hartwick said. He added that public works employees often face dangerous situations similar to the ones police officers face, but do not receive the same protections.

“This issue has been around too long to not take action,” Hartwick stated. “Public employees do not have the same protections [as private employees], and you would assume that they would come first.” He reiterated that public workers often sacrifice a higher salary because they want to serve the public.

Rep. Mehaffie recognized Rep. Patrick Harkins (D-Erie) for introducing HB 1082 and stated that the issue of worker’s rights is a bipartisan issue that “we really need to push.” He stated that employers always take care of their employees as if they were their family, and that should be no different in the public sector.

“When I became a commissioner, I could not believe that we were not following OSHA...it was astonishing,” Rep. Mehaffie added. He asserted that there are cases where PennDOT employees working on one side of a road do not have the same protections as private-sector workers on the other side of the road. He stressed for others to slow down in construction zones and have patience with public workers because accidents can occur when they rush.

Gash stated that 28 states have already passed similar safety and health protections, and that “it is time we do it in Pennsylvania.” He concluded by stating that with help, they can ensure that there will not be an empty seat at the dinner table because of another worker losing their life serving the public.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH DISCUSSES PROGRAMS HELPING STUDENTS WITH TRAUMATIC BRAIN INJURY

By Jeff Cox, Pennsylvania Legislative Services | September 12, 2019

Department of Health officials along with representatives from Pennsylvania’s BrainSTEPS (Strategies, Teaching Educators, Parents and Students) Program today held a news conference to discuss the impacts of traumatic brain injury (TBI) and resources available to students with a TBI. Sarah Boateng, executive deputy secretary at the Department of Health, told reporters, “A traumatic brain injury or TBI is an important public health issue that can cause death and disability.” She added, “Those who survive a TBI can have effects that can last for days or even the rest of their lives.”

Boateng explained that TBIs can affect memory, movement, sensations and emotions. She noted that a concussion is the most common type of TBI. Boateng reported, “According to the CDC (Centers for Disease Control), during the last decade emergency room visits for sports and recreation-related traumatic brain injuries including concussions among children and teens nationwide have increase 60 percent.” She reported, “According to the CDC, during the last decade emergency room visits for sports and recreation-related traumatic brain injuries including concussions among children and teens nationwide have increase 60 percent.” Boateng commented, “While this alarming increase is important, we can educate the public on safety tips in prevention.” She outlined some ways to reduce the risk of a concussion including the use of age and size appropriate car seats and booster seats; wearing a helmet that fits correctly; wearing proper sports equipment; and using gates at the top and bottom of stairs to prevent serious falls for infants and toddlers. Boateng explained that the BrainSTEPS program works with teachers and students’ families to improve education for those who have experienced any type of brain injury. She further explained, “BrainSTEP teams are comprised of social workers, school nurses, counselors, psychologists and athletic trainers and these teams provide training and education to teachers so they can effectively help students with a TBI achieve educational success upon graduation.”

According to Brenda Eagan-Johnson, BrainSTEPS program manager, “Pennsylvania is leading the nation for supporting students in the state who sustain any severity of acquired brain injury.” She outlined some brain injury facts including: brain injury is a leading cause of death and disability in children and adolescents according to the CDC; after a brain injury students may experience learning and/or behavioral issues; outward physical recovery of a child does not signify the brain has healed; and the effects of brain injury in children are not always apparent and may not become evident until the child reaches important developmental stages. Eagan-Johnson explained to reporters that the program was created in 2007 by Department of Health and is jointly funded by the department and the Department of Education Bureau of Special Education and is implemented by the Brain Injury Association of Pennsylvania. She further explained that BrainSTEP teams across the Commonwealth are based in the educational intermediate units under the Department of Education and are comprised of approximately 300 educational brain injury consultants. Eagan-Johnson said, “BrainSTEP teams collaborate with schools, medical providers, students and families to meet the student’s educational needs after brain injury by providing targeted consultation and training to help the school staff, including the teachers, understand the student’s brain injury and provide recommendations for appropriate academic accommodations.” She also said that once a student is referred to BrainSTEPs, “the team will follow that student annually until the student graduates.”

Eagan-Johnson told reporters, “Acquired brain injuries are brain injuries that occur after birth and include nontraumatic and traumatic injuries.” She explained, “Moderate and traumatic brain injury often results from an external physical force commonly caused by recreational activities, falls, assault, abuse, gunshot wounds, motor vehicle accidents including bicycle and pedestrian accidents and abusive head trauma. Eagan-Johnson further explained, “Nontraumatic brain injuries also receive services after a student has had a nontraumatic brain injury and those result from an internal process caused commonly by strokes, brain tumors, aneurisms, lack of oxygen to the brain, lightning strike, late term chemotherapy and radiation effects to the brain, near drowning, brain infections and viruses, toxic injuries, a cardiac event or a diabetic coma.” She noted that concussions “are the most commonly occurring type of brain injury.” Eagan-Johnson reported that BrainSTEPs created a separate training model in Pennsylvania to help schools manage student concussions and have trained over 2500 school staff since 2013 who serve on their schools’ concussion team.

Dr. Ronald Deguffroy, Lincoln Intermediate Unit 12 team leader, provided an overview of how the teams operate. He explained that the program is designed to deal with functional impairments that come with the injury. Deguffroy encourage parents to go to the program’s website www.brainsteps.net if they have a student who is suffering from a concussion or other traumatic brain injury. He noted that degree of support is based on the need of the student and for some of those it may be a combination of regular education and all the way through specialized programming.
